Not illustrated. 1849 Excerpt: .of combining their results, it is proper to take distances of stars to the eastward of the Moon, and the distances of an equal number of stars to the westward; as the errors of observation will thus be more likely to counteract each other than if the stars, used in the observations, were all on the same side of the Moon. In taking a single observation of a Lunar distance, that star should be selected, whose distance from the Moon changes most rapidly, as the errors of observation will thereby the less effect the result of the calculation: the smaller the proportional logarithm in the Nautical Almanac is, the quicker is the change of distance from the Moon. Remark 3. The Greenwich mean time corresponding to the True Lunar distance was found, by Rules, page 45, on the supposition that the rate of change in the distance is proportional to the change of the corresponding time. But as the Moon s motion is not uniform, it frequently happens that this will cause an error of some importance in the time thus calculated. And consequently a correction must be applied, which is called the correction for the inequality of the Moon s motion. To find the Correction for the Inequality of the Moon s motion. RULES. 1. Find the approximate Greenwich Mean Time by Rules, page 45. 2. Take the difference between the Proportional Logarithms given in the Nautical Almanac opposite to the distances between which the...
