A basic assumption is that concepts are composed of specified components, which are represented by large binary patterns whose psychological meaning is governed by the interaction between conceptual modules and other functional modules. A recurrent connectionist model is developed in which some inputs are attracted faster than others by an attractor, where convergence times can be interpreted as decision latencies. The learning rule proposed is extracted from psychological experiments. The rule has the property that that when a context becomes more familiar, the associations between the concepts of the context spontaneously evolve from loose associations to a more taxonomic organization. 360 pp. Englisch.
